COMMANDANT OF THE MARINE CORPS GENERAL ROBERT NELLER
joins our 2017 birthday celebration
The Marines’ Memorial Club in San Francisco has, since 1946, stood in honor of the memory of the men and women who served in defense of our nation. The Club, just one block off Union Square at 609 Sutter Street, is in the heart of downtown San Francisco. This handsome California Spanish Revival building, which enjoys San Francisco’s protected landmark status, provides a sanctuary for those who wish to take a pause and to honor the valor of Veterans who gave their lives while in the service of their country. Our Living Memorial is designed to preserve memories and share the stories of American military history.

The founders of the Club recognized three components to a living memorial: historical, emotional, and business. There was also an awareness that these three functions of the Club might overlap and complement each other. The vision of the original founders devised the framework for the Club to sustain itself in perpetuity.

The Club’s original charter specified, as a tribute to Marine Corps heroes, the establishment and maintenance of a museum. Over time, the atmosphere and ambiance of the entire building has fulfilled this historical function.

Their Mission / Our Mission

Dear Ms. Wendy Shuman:

I am the principal Senior Enlisted Marine with Special Purpose Marine Air Ground Task Force – Crisis Response, Central Command (SPMAGTF CR CC). SPMAGTF is currently operating extensively throughout the Middle East, in five different countries and 16 separate locations. I want to personally extend my sincere appreciation for The Marines’ Memorial Association and Foundation supporting Marines/Sailors worldwide — truly magnificent.

The Marines’ Memorial is well known here and you will be happy to know that Marines/Sailors who are in remote-austere Camps are very appreciative in receiving care packages.

Again, thank you and The Marines’ Memorial Association and Foundation for all you do and continue to do for Marines/Sailors worldwide!

Respectfully Submitted,

Shouting Out to MMC Staff

Dear Marines’ Memorial:

I just wanted to offer my great thanks to both Paul and Bertha for the exemplary service and assistance in making a very last minute reservation for me. Please also forward my kudos to their supervisor, who must be very proud of such excellent and expert staff members.

As always, it is so rewarding and satisfying to deal with the wonderful professional staff of the Marines’ Memorial Club.

Customer service such as provided by Paul and Bertha makes the Marines’ Memorial Club and the Association the type of organization that all members, and particularly USMC active duty and Veterans, are so proud to be a part of and to return to again and again for the wonderful hospitality offered.

Semper Fi,

Joe Gallagher, CHESP
Deputy Director of Administration Operations Management

Dear Mr. Michael Allen:

My husband and I were visiting MMC last Wednesday and I lost a treasured bracelet. Troy found it and turned it in to Housekeeping. I talked with Edith and she was so helpful in getting it returned to me. I also want to commend Troy for all his help in getting our disabled friend safely to the car. These are treasured employees and they always make our visits feel like home.

Sincerely,

Deborah A. Mezger

Why We Love Happy Hour in the Flying Leatherneck Lounge

Congratulations to Eagle of the Quarter Brian Casey! Brian was hired to open the Flying Leatherneck Lounge in May of 2014 and has carved out a solid reputation behind the bar. He loves the job and takes pride in running an efficient operation. Brian enjoys meeting and talking to members, and the feeling is clearly mutual, as he is the frequent target of hugs and handshakes. “I was a TWA flight attendant for years, working the first class cabin between New York and Paris,” he says. “That’s the experience I’m trying to give here.” Experience it for yourself: come to your Club’s Members-only Happy Hour any Tuesday through Friday from 4 to 6 pm.

In Memory

In the Spring 2018 edition of Crossroads of the Corps, we will begin listing the names of recently deceased MMA members. If you know of a member who has passed on since 1 January 2017, please send his or her name to Member@MarineClub.com or call us at (415) 673-6672.

“A Port in the Firestorm

Last October, when catastrophic fires hit Sonoma and Napa Counties, the Marines’ Memorial Club became a refuge for dozens of evacuees. Most of them believed they would be away from home for a day, two at the most. Many left their homes in a frantic rush, carrying only essentials — a purse, a pet, medications, some important papers, perhaps a change of clothes. One member had her two school age children and her elderly parents in tow. “My job was to stay calm,” she says. Another made her first solo trek to the Club since being widowed exactly one year before. As the fire danger and evacuation orders stretched on, the Club met the need for shelter and staff did everything possible to make evacuees feel cared for. Breakfasts and happy hours buzzed with the sharing of news, fears, and words of support. This is the essence of “home away from home.”

“Most people on campus call me Dean. It’s a name, not a title, as I tell my students!” says Stanford Professor of Medicine and retired US Air Force Colonel DEAN WINSLOW. Until July, Dean and his wife and fellow Professor Julie Parsonnet were Resident Fellows living among undergrads in a Stanford dormitory, making the name/title distinction an important one. These days, the couple are at home up in the redwoods when not staying the night in their small on-campus condo or teaching abroad — they recently took advantage of reciprocal club privileges in the UK while teaching at Oxford. Dean served for 35 years as a flight surgeon in the USAF and Air National Guard, retiring in 2015. He served four tours of duty in Iraq and two in Afghanistan, including commanding the combat hospital in Baghdad during the surge in 2008. Having learned about the Club from several of his Vietnam era USMC buddies, Dean joined in 2002. “My wife and I enjoy the special lectures, as well as staying overnight,” he says. They most recently attended the talks given by Gen Dunford and Gen Clapper, and the Salute to Iraq and Afghanistan Veterans. “We love the ambience of MMC,” he adds, “being surrounded by other Veterans.”

When KARL KADON moved to San Francisco three years ago, he asked a Bay Area Marine with whom he’d served in Afghanistan: “Who should I meet out here?” As a highly involved member of both the Marines’ Memorial and Wine Country Marines, Karl himself is a good one to know. His commitment to Bay Area Veterans centers on increasing the value Veterans bring to the workforce, while helping the larger community to embrace those who have served. He also sees a gap between generations of Veterans, and wants to close it. In recent MMA member roundtables, Karl shared his vision for bringing younger and more senior members together, for mentorship in addition to fellowship. In general, he says, “the Marines’ Memorial can do even better for networking. It’s a great and logical place for Veterans to meet up with friends and mentors.” Karl, who served in Iraq as a ground intel adviser and in Afghanistan as a civil affairs team leader, credits Service to School (S2S) — a non-profit, mentorship-based college application assistance program for transitioning Veterans — with helping him get into business school, ultimately leading to his current senior management position at Salesforce. Using S2S as a model, he believes that mentorships within the Club can build “a community of practice that lowers the barrier to entry for younger professional Veterans.”

“The Marines’ Memorial reminds me of what I love about being a Marine,” says former Marine Corps Captain LEE HANEY. He explains that while Veterans of the 9/11 generation may be reluctant to join some of the more traditional Veterans’ organizations, they are hungry for communities where Veterans with shared values can look forward together, supporting each other in their lives and careers. “Our generation’s Veterans are seeking each other out,” he adds, “and the Club is a great center of gravity for us.” He finds the Leatherneck Restaurant ideal for events like the popular quarterly Veteran dinners he hosts with Army Veteran Eddie Kang. Because “it’s hard trying to make it in Silicon Valley alone,” Lee, who serves as the Chief of Staff to the CEO of Micro Focus, stays active within a network of fellow Bay Area Veterans. He serves as a mentor and, until recently, as CFO for Service to School (S2S), a non-profit for Veterans pursuing higher education. He also brings his civilian friends into the Club to share what they might never guess just walking by: behind the blue awning and etched glass sign is a place with a history worth learning and a unique community worth meeting. He hopes reading this will encourage others to come out to the Club. “That’s the effect members’ stories have had on me.”

In 2015, MAJ ALEX MARTIN, USMCR moved home to California from Kenya to start up AC Global Risk with a team of fellow Veterans. That same year, Alex joined the Marines’ Memorial. “In our pre-financing years,” he recalls, “I used the Club’s library as an office. It’s quiet and inspiring. And at the end of a challenging day, there’s a great bar” just upstairs. AC’s voice analysis-based risk management product goes to market this year, and Alex still uses the Club to host meetings or simply to “have a break and charge my batteries” during long days in the City. After graduation from the Naval Academy, where he studied history, Alex joined the Marines, serving three tours in Iraq and a fourth in the Pacific, Horn of Africa and the Middle East. He left active duty in 2011 and built a maritime security company. “I sold that and took a position with Nuru International as Country Manager in Kenya,” says Alex. Nuru seeks to end extreme poverty by training local leaders to create solutions tailored to their community’s needs. Alex’s energy and entrepreneurial spirit offer a look into the future of MMC, which he appreciates as “a clubhouse to meet, connect, reconnect, and grow your personal and professional network in a warm, beautiful environment.”

In 1969, my sister had her wedding reception here. Many years later, having been widowed, she married again and had her second wedding reception here. I spent part of my honeymoon here, and my wife and I have spent time in the Club over the years. The Marines’ Memorial Club has been part of my family’s history for over 50 years now. I also came to the Club while serving on active duty and returned a number of times to participate in events at General Myatt’s or the organization’s request.

I worked with General Myatt in 1985 in the Marines, and kept up with him through the years. When he was the President and CEO here, I’d stop in to say hello and think, boy, what a cool job. I’d always ask him: Hey, General Myatt, when are you retiring? …thinking maybe there would be an opening for me. But I finally dropped that, realizing that he’d probably stay here forever.

So, when this opportunity was presented to me earlier this year, I thought, well, let me give it a shot. After all, I know the area; I really admire what the Club does, what it represents; and I have a long history of coming here.

The Marines’ Memorial is often described as a “best kept secret” in San Francisco. What would you like for every San Franciscan to think and feel about the organization and the Club itself? I would like the average San Franciscan to look at the Marines’ Memorial as one of their treasures, as one of their living memorials. I want them to know its long, rich tradition and history in this city. I want them to know, understand and participate in all of the wonderful things that the Marines’ Memorial does and stands for — and to really associate themselves with it.

In fact, we have a lot of wonderful supporters who are not members of this Association, but who work very closely with us on things like Fleet Week, volunteering with support programs for the troops, Blue Star Mothers, and many more. We’re open to the general public for a lot of things, and we enjoy having that support within the community. Frankly, I hadn’t realized until now the depth of support we do have in the community.

What was your path to this position, and what attracted you to it? When I was leaving the Marine Corps, everybody asked: What do you want to do? Well, I always wanted to be a Marine. That was done, and with no particular “home” to go back to, we rented a place in Annandale, Virginia. With most of our stuff in storage and our kids grown, my wife and I lived like a couple of college students. I wound up consulting for the government and we stayed there for 10 years, until this opportunity came along.

The best part about being a United States Marine is other Marines. Any Marine will tell you that. People ask me and other retired Marines: Do you miss the Marine Corps? Well, I don’t necessarily miss all of the things I did as a Marine; those are best turned over to younger men and women. But as most will tell you, I miss being around other Marines. I miss the camaraderie, the joviality, the buffoonery. This job gives me the opportunity to, once again, cavort with the finest people on earth, US Marines — active, reserve, former, retired, whatever — along with those who support Marines.

It is called the Marines’ Memorial Association, after all, but where do the other services fit in? More than ever, we now recognize the importance of being affiliated. It took the Department of Defense a long time to get us as joint as we are today. I’m delighted to see all of the services participating here. And if you look at our membership numbers, Marines are, in fact, no longer the majority. It’s the Navy, followed by Marines, a sizable proportion of Army members, then Air Force and Coast Guard. We are truly a joint organization.

What do you think will drive the Association’s success in fulfilling its mission in the coming years? As the Greatest Generation passes, it is our transition from older members to younger ones that will drive our success. Sure, the Korea and Vietnam Veterans are holding a lot of the leadership roles in the organization, but they’re not the future. The future is out there now, especially the post-9/11 group. They’ve done their time and served and sacrificed. Now they’re making their lives and their contributions in the civilian community. Those are the ones that we need to attract to keep this organization going.

That’s not a unique challenge to us today. I remember when I was a younger guy in the Marine Corps in the post-Vietnam era, people were saying: Do you go and join the VFW and the American Legion? And we’d say no, that’s for the older guys! We’re too busy doing what young people do. The younger ones will eventually come on board, but we need to be sure we’re leaving them a good institution, a good legacy, and the right shoes to fill.

Is there any particular area — outreach, operations, fundraising, membership — that is in line for major growth or change? All of the above, but not just change for change’s sake. This institution is centered around this building, which is almost 100 yrs old. As with anything so old, we need to be careful about care and maintenance. I’m beginning to realize that we’re going to have really pay attention to maintaining and improving this facility or we won’t have a place in the future in which to take care of our Veterans and our members. That will take an infusion of money. We’re going to create unique new ways to reach out to donors, and provide more services that will attract more revenue.

It’s not that we haven’t been doing a good job. General Myatt raised this place to a new level. I know what it was like before he got here, and it is not the same place; it’s much, much better. So I recognize the challenge I have in succeeding him. He built a nice firm foundation, and now it’s time to build on his success. We can’t rest on the laurels of where we are in 2017. If you’re not crossing the stream, if you’re just standing in the middle of it, it’s going to wash you away eventually.

After successful military and civilian careers, what do you feel you still need to learn to achieve your goals here? I’ve had some non-profit experience, and I have broad experience in the Marine Corps. From 2000-2003, I was the commanding general at the recruit depot in San Diego. Part of my duties there was recruiting, part of them was recruit training, and the other part was being installation commander of the depot itself. On its 319 acres, there were restaurants, clubs, police and fire departments, stores, and entertainment facilities. It had a civilian labor force, as well. This experience helps, but the specifics that I now have to know — to help supervise the running of a restaurant, hotel, membership organization, a staff of 170 people, making payroll, facing the challenges of being in San Francisco in an older installation — who says you can’t teach an old dog new tricks?! Watching Gen Myatt walk out the door with his 16 years of experience in this position, I’m thinking to myself, it’s a good thing he’s only an email or a phone call away.

You have a reputation for delivering your message with humor. Running the Marines’ Memorial is serious business, but will humor figure into your leadership style here as well? No doubt about it.

What keeps you humming, outside of work? I’ve been married for 44 years. My wife willingly followed me from duty station to duty station, allowing me to go do what I wanted to do, to follow my dreams of being a United States Marine. Now, I play golf poorly. I still work out. I like to read. And we spend time with our three kids and seven grandchildren — somewhere in all of that, there’ll be a Marine! We also travel a good bit, often with a group of relatives and friends.

What makes the Marines’ Memorial so special, in your view? Not only is this building a treasure, but the relationships we have with the people of San Francisco and the people that we serve are extraordinary. And I can’t say enough about the people who are employed here. Because of their passion for serving our Veterans and their pride in being associated with the Marines’ Memorial, they’re truly civilian Marines. They’re spirited, loyal, hard working, and have a can-do attitude. You’d never hear anyone say: No, that’s not my job. It’s always: How can I help? How could you turn down an opportunity to serve an organization like that?

Like the troops used to say: Nothing left to it but to do it.

On 18 September 2017, the Marines’ Memorial Association held the first installment of its Leadership Lessons Learned Series. The inaugural speaker was Chris Michel, a Naval ROTC graduate from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign who holds an MBA from Harvard Business School. Chris was an aviator in the Navy and founded Military.com in 1999, which was acquired by Monster.com. Chris also founded Affinity Labs and runs Nautlius Ventures, a seed venture fund.

Recently transitioned Veterans attended Chris’s talk, in which he provided transition, leadership, and business advice to the group. Chris spoke about starting Military.com when he was 31 years old and about his desire to build something that mattered. Chris spoke intimately about the challenges of founding, building, and growing a company as a young Veteran entrepreneur.

Chris shared with the young Veterans advice on how to not confuse activities for outcomes, and to focus on the few things that really matter. He also advised that the young Veterans could succeed well if they prioritized people, passion, and performance in their careers and are mindful of how they interact with their colleagues.

Chris spoke about the importance of leadership, pointing out that military units with similar talent, similar equipment, and similar missions can have significantly varying levels of performance because of the quality of the leader. He said that, to attract and retain talent, leaders in both the military and civilian sectors need to build cultures of excellence that provide an atmosphere of honesty and high expectations.

Chris concluded the night’s talk by telling the group that he was most proud of the relationships he had built and urged the recently transitioned Veterans to support one another and to develop meaningful relationships.

The group of Veterans thoroughly enjoyed the event, with one remarking that “this was an incredibly educating and enlightening session” with an accomplished Veteran who had generously shared his insights and experience with the group. All of the Veterans across different branches (Marines, Navy, Air Force, and Army) thanked Chris effusively for his time and also had time before and after to connect with one another.

The Marines’ Memorial Association’s Leadership Lessons Learned Series is part of a new outreach initiative to grow its membership among recently transitioned Veterans. If you would like to learn more about programs, events, and initiatives for young Veterans, please contact the Membership Department at Member@MarineClub.com or (415) 673-6672.

DONATE: MARINECLUB.ORG/DONATE • Marines’ Memorial Association
Admiral James G. Stavridis, USN (Ret.), author and current Dean of The Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy at Tufts University, addressed members of the Marines’ Memorial Association in the Marines’ Memorial Theater on 20 September 2017 as part of the George P. Shultz Lecture Series. This lecture series regularly brings remarkable national security figures to the Bay Area for in-depth discussions of current events and policy issues.

In the brief introduction by Major General Mike Myatt and former Secretary of State George P. Shultz, the audience was regaled with some of the Admiral’s achievements. These included his long-term service as a commander in the US Navy — 37 years — as well as 22 published articles, 70 op-ed pieces, and the 11 books he’s written to date. As former Secretary Shultz said, “He’s a true scholar-warrior,” who holds a Ph.D. from The Fletcher School at Tufts, where he is now the Dean.

Admiral Stavridis took the stage to inform the audience about how the world’s oceans are becoming of ever greater economic and political importance. He started with historical and geographical breakdowns of all the oceans in the world and the challenges they face today, noting that 95% of all international trade happens across oceans.

For the Pacific Ocean, the Admiral began by saying that all of the lands in the world could fit within the Pacific Ocean alone. The Pacific is vast and has been navigated for millennia. Americans didn’t discover this ocean first — it was China. Now, China’s rising naval power, similar in size to the US Navy, is working more and more with Russia’s Navy. However, the biggest problems in the Pacific Ocean area arise from North Korea and Kim Jong Un’s nuclear weapons program and missile activity.

He then discussed the North Atlantic, which has long been a “zone of transit” through which undocumented migrants and illicit drugs flow, either directly or indirectly, to the United States. We now find this space, particularly the Greenland-Iceland-UK Gap, challenged by a resurgent Russia, as its presence grows there again. There are also several emerging economic superpowers along the South Atlantic, including Brazil, South Africa, and Nigeria. These three countries are continuing to grow and driving significant trade along the Atlantic. The Atlantic Ocean, the second largest ocean in the world, will continue to be of great importance to the United States.

ADM Stavridis continued on to highlighting the Indian Ocean, the third largest ocean in the world. Historically, this ocean was traveled in the pursuit of spices. While India and Pakistan compete for control in this part of the world, along with a little influence from Iran, piracy has also become a major issue here.

Turning to the Mediterranean, ADM Stavridis explained that wars at sea originated here. Going all the way back to the Ottomans and Romans, wars on the Mediterranean have affected the sea and its surrounding lands. He also noted the competition for power among Mediterranean countries, weighted by US and Russian support, and reflected on this region being the starting point for the current refugee crisis.

Heading a little closer to home, Admiral Stavridis laid out some of the unique challenges faced by the countries on the Caribbean Sea. Once ruled by the Spanish Empire, the Caribbean is now a prime waterway for the transport of goods. It is also home to some of the most dangerous countries in the world, due to the dominance of gangs, the violence of the narcotics trade, and frequent natural disasters. All of these lead citizens to flee and become refugees elsewhere.

Finally, ADM Stavridis came to the Arctic Ocean, the “top” of the Earth, which explorers used to believe held a temperate zone. The United States is still finding a strategy for its presence in the region, while Russia continues to increase its own presence. With the Arctic ice melting, ADM Stavridis predicts that by mid-century, we will be able to sail across the top of the world year-round — the Arctic as a temperate zone, after all. The area will likely face continuing challenges as the ice melts, since new lanes of transit will open, along with new resources becoming available.

Considering the oceans of the world in a broader scope, ADM Stavridis discussed both challenges and opportunities for improvement. He described the oceans as the “world’s largest crime scene,” with problems like pollution and plastics, underreported fishing, piracy, and natural disasters.

“News flash: there is no temperate zone at the top of the world now. But, the ice is melting...by the middle of this century, year-round, we’ll be able to sail across the top of the world. And this has significant implications for geopolitics and for the recovery of hydrocarbons.”

> ADM JAMES STAVRIDIS

So how do we create a better strategy for using our world’s waterways? By listening better — to ourselves, our opponents, and the oceans themselves; and also by forging creative new alliances between countries and between public and private organizations; and, finally, by holding true to our own values.

In the post-presentation Q & A session with Jane Wales, President & CEO of the World Affairs Council, ADM Stavridis spoke more about current world issues and the United States’ influence on those issues. One of the biggest concerns addressed was the threat the Kim Jong Un poses to the world. As a third generation dictator, which is extremely rare, Kim seeks respect on the world stage. The dictator’s long-term goal is to have complete control of the entire Korean peninsula and continue his life of power and prestige. There was also discussion about Iran and what they anticipate will happen once the current theocracy ends its reign. Stavridis and Wales went on to discuss current conflicts in Yemen and the crisis in Venezuela. They also touched on China’s new status as an economic competitor after spending the last 50 years raising their citizens out of poverty.

The Admiral’s talk concluded on two notes about refugees and service to our country. He said that, as a nation, we need to remember that there are compassionate and pragmatic reasons for bringing refugees into the country. He shared an anecdote about a young Syrian father holding his toddler’s hand and carrying a baby in his backpack, as they fled their homeland. Stavridis spoke to the endurance, courage, and bravery of that young man and said that people with those values are the ones that he wants on his team. Those are the people who, in this first generation, will start small businesses, send their kids to college, and then the following generations will be CEOs of major companies.

He ended with a word of encouragement for others to serve their country in some capacity. ADM Stavridis, who was vetted as a potential pick for Hillary Clinton’s running mate in the 2016 election, shared his hope that those who are interested in national service would: be centrist, balanced, and respectful to other people; listen more than they speak; be smart and hold their own values; and show a good sense of humor and humility.

On 25 September 2017, renowned author and journalist Mark Bowden spoke at the Marines’ Memorial Club. Bowden and the evening’s moderator, Major General Raymond Smith, USMC (Ret.), discussed a pivotal moment in the history of the Vietnam War. MajGen Smith was a Company Commander at the Battle of Hue. Richard Horner, another former Marine who fought in the battle, joined Bowden and Smith for the discussion.

Bowden, formerly of The Philadelphia Enquirer and Vanity Fair, and the author of Black Hawk Down, considers Hue 1968 to be his most ambitious book yet. This is a true story and Bowden called it “one of the most powerful stories” he’s written. He also shared that one of his writing goals is to describe what actually happened. By interviewing scores of Vietnamese Veterans and civilians and hundreds of American Veterans, Bowden was able to create that better understanding of the people involved in the Battle of Hue. These interviews and research were conducted over a six year period. Stateside, he worked with the LBJ Presidential Library, the National Archives, and the Oral History Project at the Marine Corps Museum. His research informed his point of view from the American perspective as well as from the Vietnamese perspective, where this war was a multi-generational struggle for independence.

Bowden and Smith addressed several audience questions about the specifics of the battle, especially around which side won and at what cost. While the American forces did successfully recapture the city, Bowden noted that more Vietnamese civilians were killed than actual combatants. Several thousand people were killed during this time; 80% of the city was destroyed; and 80% of civilians were left homeless. The American leadership at the time, both in Vietnam and in Washington, had a complete misunderstanding of what awaited them inside Hue.

Bowden also shared that since so many people were removed from the city soon after the battle began, it was often difficult, as he conducted his research, to find people whose stories took them all the way through the battle.

The event concluded with discussion of how American forces might still be present in Vietnam if there were a candidate who could garner enough support to create a democratic government there.

On 12 October 2017, General Robert Brown, US Army visited the Marines’ Memorial Club to discuss “Security in the Indo-Asia Pacific.” General Brown’s talk focused primarily on land forces in the region. He also discussed how multi-national leadership is key in bettering the Indo-Asia Pacific.

Major General Mike Myatt introduced the speaker with a brief explanation of GEN Brown’s expertise and education. As Commanding General of US Army Pacific (USARPAC), GEN Brown oversees the US Army’s largest service component command, headquartered at Fort Shafter, Hawaii, with portions of the command forward deployed and based throughout the Indo-Asia Pacific. His command includes 106,000 active, reserve soldiers and civilians in support of the nation’s strategic objectives and commitment to the region. Before attaining his current post, GEN Brown served as Commanding General at the US Army Combined Arms Center at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

GEN Brown described the Indo-Asia Pacific as one of the fastest growing regions of the world, with approximately 4 billion inhabitants. Of those 4 billion, 2 billion are actively plugged into the Internet. The region holds seven of the world’s eight fastest growing markets and it is projected that by 2050, seven of every 10 people in the world will live in this region. The Indo-Asia Pacific region is home to seven of the 10 largest militaries and three of the largest economies in the world. The region also holds 24 of the 36 global megacities and 16 different time zones.

As the region has continued to grow, so have threats to its security. GEN Brown highlighted some of the major issues facing the Indo-Asia Pacific today, the most critical being Kim Jong Un and North Korea. Until recently, North Korea lacked the capability to reach beyond South Korea. The Supreme Leader of North Korea, Kim Jong Un, has initiated 88 (and counting) missile launches since 2012. Kim Jong Un considers the survival of his regime to be of utmost importance.

Second, he detailed some of the threats that China and Russia present to the region. While the United States tries to work with China, they often say one thing and then do another. GEN Brown used the example of the Fiery Cross Reef, which China said they would not militarize, but which they now have. He also spoke about how Russia is militarizing the Arctic, even as the United States is still creating a strategy for our presence there. Extremist ideology is also of great concern, with 30 organizations sworn to ISIS within the region.

Aside from the human factor, the Indo-Asia Pacific faces ongoing threats from natural disasters like earthquakes, floods, and tsunamis. By 2020, one billion people will live in disaster-prone areas considered to be at high to extreme risk.

Finally, GEN Brown talked about Iran, which poses a threat to the region, albeit indirectly, owing to its partnerships with North Korea.

For the future, GEN Brown communicated some ways that the United States works with other national governments to promote democracy in the region. These include engagements with leaders and allies, major training exercises, and the first trilateral meeting of leaders in history. Another major effort has been made to enhance our allies’ military efforts so that the United States can have less involvement. GEN Brown also reminded the audience that the United States has the best joint force in the world, but to maintain this distinction, we must continue to work to become more jointly integrated between air, land, sea, cyber, and space.

In the Q&A after his talk, he also spoke about how the North Korean threat has affected people in the region and described how the United States uses off-the-shelf technology, including unmanned aerial systems, to support our efforts in the region.

Whether you designate your gift for a specific program like
GOLD STAR PARENT EVENTS
CARE PACKAGES
ACTIVE DUTY AID & ASSIST
or let us direct it where it’s needed most, every dollar you give carries our mission into the future
TO HONOR THE LEGACY OF MILITARY SERVICE.
THE MARINES’ MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION’S 4TH ANNUAL

Giving Tree Trimming was celebrated in the Flying Leatherneck Lounge on Saturday afternoon, 2 December 2017. The gathering included Gold Star Moms, as well as Surviving Spouse members, volunteers and guests. With an array of tasty treats and champagne to toast the holiday season, there was time for socializing and arts and crafts.

This project, developed by the Membership Department, lets members and friends personalize ornaments for loved ones. The ornaments are then displayed on the Giving Tree during the holiday season. In the beginning of the new year, we send them to the participating families as keepsakes.

The Marines’ Memorial appreciates all of the Giving Tree donations, which support our mission to honor the legacy of military service through programs that commemorate, educate and serve our nation’s Veterans, the Currently Serving and their families.

This past October, the Marines’ Memorial Club participated in Northern California’s largest free-to-the-public civic event, San Francisco Fleet Week. This annual event celebrates our nation’s sea services with public events and activities for visiting sailors, Marines and Coast Guardsmen. San Francisco Fleet Week has also become the model Fleet Week for the nation due to its invaluable education and training programs on joint military/civilian humanitarian assistance and disaster response missions.

Fleet Week’s Center for Humanitarian Assistance (the Center) gives the event a serious purpose by leveraging the presence of military assets to organize interoperable humanitarian assistance and disaster response training and education programs with local, state and federal first responder agencies. This year, the Center’s program began by connecting local civilian emergency personnel with their military counterparts to conduct medical exercises. Participants were flown out to the USS Essex and, while on board, learned about the medical service capabilities onboard US Navy ships. The second part of this exercise, organized in partnership with the San Francisco Department of Emergency Management, involved USS Essex launching a Landing Craft Utility (LCU) to demonstrate the “last tactical mile” delivery of commodities to citizens following a catastrophic event.

The equipment then made its way to Zuckerberg San Francisco General Hospital, where a Shock Trauma Center was erected for interoperability training and tours for medical personnel throughout the city, furthering education and awareness between civilian and military personnel who might be working together in the wake of a disaster.

The week went on to include further training exercises involving multiple entities in a variety of settings, including urban search and rescue and EMS “ride-alongs” for sailors and Marines, all to further the Center’s goal of harnessing the presence of the military to strengthen our nation’s ability to respond to humanitarian crises.

The Center’s eighth annual Senior Leaders Seminar (SLS) provided a forum for military and civilian leaders to discuss best practices in dealing with the various humanitarian issues facing our world today. This year, panel discussions were held on humanitarian assistance challenges and developments, as well as current regional and national disaster and medical surge exercises.

The Marines’ Memorial Theater was the venue for the Center’s discussion with author, filmmaker, and combat journalist Sebastian Junger. The program was moderated by Jane Wales, CEO of the World Affairs Council, and was later broadcast on National Public Radio (www.youtube.com/watch?v=dnSr-x7aWhg).

Day 2 of the SLS took place onboard the USS Essex and included break-out discussion groups on such topics as life-line services disruption, community outreach, technological developments, and cyber-security.

This year, the Seminar brought such luminary speakers and attendees as former Secretary of State George P. Shultz. A host of general and flag officers spoke and/or attended, including Vice Admiral James Alexander, USN, Commander, THIRD Fleet; Lieutenant General Lew Craparotta, Commander IMEF; Vice Admiral Fred Midgette, Commander, USCG Pacific Area; Mark Ghilarducci, Director of the Governor’s Office of Emergency Services in California; and Bob Fenton, Regional Administrator of FEMA Region IX.

Expanding the former Veterans Seminar to a more robust Veterans Resource Fair in 2017, the Center offered local and regional businesses and organizations the opportunity to showcase programs and employment opportunities offered to Veterans, as well as advise on issues that transitioning to civilian life can pose. The fair, held at the Marines’ Memorial Club, was followed with a talk by Sebastian Junger on his book, Tribe.

The 1st Marine Division Band’s annual Honor Our Fallen Concert received an overwhelming response from attendees in the Marines’ Memorial Theater. Honor Our Fallen is a moving tribute to post-9/11 service members who have made the ultimate sacrifice for their country.

The San Francisco Olympic Club took home the championship trophy from the San Francisco Fleet Week Softball Tournament. The tournament and the annual Fleet Week Crew Barbeque, organized by the Oakland Navy League, are two of the most popular events for the visiting active duty service members. In the spirit of growing these popular events, San Francisco Fleet Week, along with the Olympic Club, hosted its first annual military/civilian Marksman-ship Competition, reviving the Nimitz Cup tradition.

Over a million people around the Bay were dazzled by the annual air show featuring the United States Navy Blue Angels in their F/A-18s, along with other performers including the US Navy Leap Frogs Parachute Team, the US Air Force F-22 Raptor Demonstration Team, and the Canadian Forces 431 Air Demonstration Squadron — the “Snowbirds.”

In San Francisco’s Marina Green, the Humanitarian Assistance Village provided interactive and educational displays of US military and civilian first responder capabilities. In 2017, the Village expanded to include the STEM Education Center, presented by Verizon, which highlighted the wonders of science, technology, engineering, and mathematics.

The eighth annual San Francisco Fleet Week High School Band Challenge was held on Columbus Day at the historic Band Shell inside Golden Gate Park. Since 2010, the Band Challenge has contributed over $200,000 to support music and art programs in Bay Area schools. This year, seven bands put on sensational performances for cheering crowds. The First Marine Division Band filled the intermissions with modern and patriotic arrangements. This year’s winning band was Santa Teresa High School Marching Band & Color Guard from San Jose, who celebrated as they received a check for $10,000. Prize money was awarded to all participating bands.

With great memories of Fleet Week 2017 remaining, the nonprofit San Francisco Fleet Week Association is already planning for 2018. You can donate to help keep this tradition alive and watch for activities by following San Francisco Fleet Week on Facebook (www.facebook.com/Fleet-Week) and at www.fleetweeksf.org.

W hat lifts a black kid growing up in 1950s segregated South Carolina and propels him into outer space?

Asked if he had always dreamed of being a Marine, a pilot, and an astronaut, retired Major General Charles Bolden answers: “Not at all.” In fact, at age eight, young Charlie was invited to fly with his father’s friend, a former Tuskegee Airman. He did not enjoy the ride. Actually, it was the Navy that had captured his attention.

Men of Annapolis was a popular TV series of the late 1950s that followed the adventures of Dusty Rhodes, a fictitious midshipman at the US Naval Academy. Charlie loved the show and envisioned himself at the Academy one day. Also, “there was another show I watched, about Underwater Demolition Teams,” he recalls. “I wanted to do that.” So 12-year-old Charlie Bolden had a life plan.

In Bolden’s senior year of high school, 1963–64, schools in his hometown of Columbia were still segregated. As the child of two educators, college was a given and the standard options were either to attend a Black college or to leave the South. But the Naval Academy seed had been planted and he carried out a vigorous campaign to get himself there.

“Every year, beginning in the seventh grade, I wrote to my congressman and my state’s senators [one of whom was Strom Thurmond], asking for an appointment to the Academy,” says Bolden. “I kept being told, ‘you’re a little early. Write again when you’re a senior.’” But when the moment arrived, senior year, when it really counted, the final answers came: No, no, and hell no. Thurmond said that appointing a black boy to the Academy was just not something he could do, politically.

Charlie persevered, writing to Vice President Johnson, who also was empowered to make Academy appointments. As fate would have it, before he could answer, the Vice President became President. “I wrote a letter to the new President,” Bolden says. “I let him know I needed help, and would appreciate anything he could do.” A few weeks later, a Navy recruiter showed up at the Bolden home, looking for qualified Black and Hispanic young men. William Dawson of Chicago gave the appointment.

One dream attained, one more to go. But Midshipman Bolden soon discovered that the Academy offered no track to Underwater Demolition. As he pondered what to do instead, he watched and learned from his company officer, who was a Marine. “He was tough and fair and reminded me of my father,” Bolden remembers. He did enjoy being at sea, but decided to join the Marine Corps after graduation. His high academic standing gave him an aviation option, a good thing since he realized he “didn’t like crawling around in the mud.” So Bolden and his wife packed for Pensacola. To his surprise, he fell in love the first time he flew.

That USNA company officer was the first in a series of mentors and friends who influenced Bolden’s trajectory from Marine Officer, to pilot, to test pilot, to astronaut. Another notable example was Ron McNair, an African American test pilot with a Ph.D. in Physics from MIT and a mastery of jazz saxophone, who wanted nothing more than to go into space (and who tragically died in the Challenger disaster). McNair’s passion was contagious and he encouraged his friend to overcome whatever was stopping him from applying to NASA. “My parents had told my brother and me we could do and be anything we wanted,” says Bolden.

“I’d forgotten that.” So he applied. Sadly, his father passed before the results came in placing him in the second group of space shuttle astronauts.

After his service as an astronaut, which included piloting the Space Shuttles Columbia and Discovery, Bolden returned to the Naval Academy to serve as Deputy Commandant of Midshipmen, until President Obama nominated him to the position of NASA Administrator in May 2009. He was the first African American to head the agency on a permanent basis.

Bolden is forthcoming on the state of diversity in the US Military. “We try,” he says, “but there’s still a long way to go in getting equity in the officer ranks. There’s much better diversity in combat support, though, and we’ve long set the standard in the enlisted ranks. As a Marine Recruiter, I heard people say the officer pool is just too small. But how many black colleges do they visit? We have to really reach out, help build the pool.” He would also like to see more effort spent at the Basic School guiding minority students to successfully compete for elite positions.

He also is a great proponent of Black History Month. “My son, a Marine Colonel, is married to an Australian,” he explains. “Their daughters are light skinned. One of them asked me why we celebrate Black History Month. All she’s known is the Marine Corps. Her friends are white. She doesn’t have the baggage. I said I hope there’ll come a time when we won’t have to. But think back to your history books: we still have to supplement what you learn as ‘American history.’” History is in the making every day, and when the color of an astronaut’s, a general’s, or any great achiever’s skin is no longer news, says Charlie Bolden, “that will be a great thing.”

LOOKING BACK ON A YEAR OF OUTSTANDING LEADERSHIP

The Marines’ Memorial Board of Directors acknowledges with gratitude the outstanding service of outgoing Board Chairman Lieutenant General Robert Johnson, USMC (Ret.). During his yearlong tenure, General Johnston’s guidance was instrumental in our very successful transition from one Marine General to another in the position of President & CEO. He is completely unflappable and helmed the MMA Board always demonstrating his strong but quiet style of leadership.

General Johnston served for 34 years on active duty in the Marine Corps. He served with the Association’s former President & CEO Mike Myatt in Viet Nam in 1965, and with current President & CEO Jan Huly at MCRD San Diego in the early 1970s. His last duty assignment was as Commander, Marine Forces Atlantic Marine Forces Europe and II Marine Expeditionary Force. During the Gulf War, he served as the CENTCOM Chief-of-Staff. He retired from the US Marine Corps in 1995 and lives in Tucson, Arizona.

After 20 wonderful years of teaming up with Benziger Family Winery to provide wine for Club events and our Hotel Happy Hour, we have retired our MMC Benziger private label house wines.

In November, we launched three new house wines from 10 Span Vineyards. On the 17th, members and guests enjoyed a special tasting at the Club, with winery representatives pouring their Cabernet, Chardonnay and Pinot Noir.

ABOUT 10 SPAN WINES

Artisan-crafted 10 Span fine wines are sourced from select cool-climate vineyards along California’s Central Coast. Named for the California Condor’s wingspan, 10 Span is inspired by these majestic birds to contribute a portion of proceeds to the Ventana Wildlife Society’s efforts to reintroduce the endangered California Condor into the wild.

TASTING NOTES

10 Span Chardonnay: Rich and elegant with decadent layers of butter, cream, bright citrus and vanilla.
10 Span Cabernet Sauvignon: Rich, smooth and elegantly textured, with flavors of blackberry, ripe dark cherry, black currant, and cassis that blend into cocoa, tobacco and toasted oak.
10 Span Pinot Noir: A heady aroma of cherries carries through to the palate, then opens up to a touch of red currants and a hint of spice.

BENZIGER UPDATE

The Benziger family continues to make fantastic wines since being acquired by The Wine Group in June 2015.

Our Catering Department will continue to offer Benziger wines for your special events. We also still have some Benziger/Marines’ Memorial private label bottles available for sale. You can purchase them at the Club or online at the MarineClubStore.com while supplies last.
